SS-Steel: Parade & Combat Helmets of Germany's Third Reich Elite
(Updated Edition)

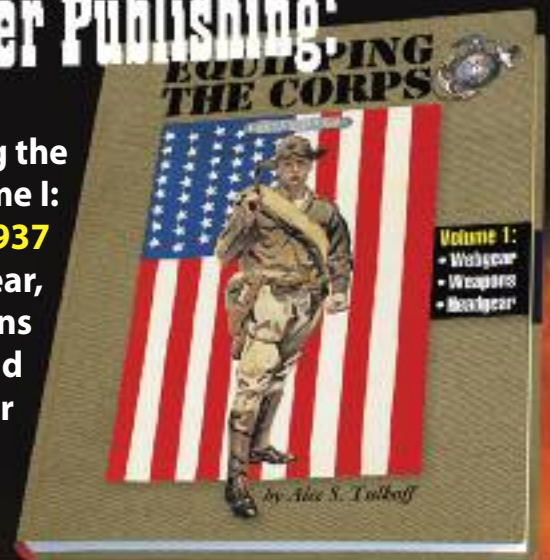

by Kelly Hicks

The central issue regarding collecting SS helmets is the huge amount of fakes now on the market. "SS-Steel" is intended to assist the collector in determining the fakes from the real thing. It provides information specific to their paint, decals and general characteristics. This analysis is conducted within the framework of history; illustrating how the forces of politics and war influenced the equipping of Germany's "elite guard." During full-scale production of the M-35 series of helmets, each of the five German helmet makers installed their own pattern of SS decal on helmets at the factory. Fine examples of dozens of helmets show clear evidence of this maker-to-decal correlation. In addition to the decal analysis, "SS-Steel" explores the high degree of re-use and re-issue of helmets, compared to the other services. Variations, unusual and rare helmets, and "foreign volunteer" SS helmets are also explored. This Expanded Edition includes a 64 page update with the latest information.

Webgear, Weapons and Headgear

By Alec S. Tulkoff

The long awaited follow-up to the award winning "Grunt Gear" has taken seven years to research and it does not disappoint. Tulkoff has once again combed through countless archives and private collections to bring never before seen USMC pieces of equipment and photographs together in this first of a two volume set. Volume I covers the field gear, small arms (pistols, rifles and machineguns) and headgear from 1892 to 1937. The evolution of the Marine Corps bell crown cap is meticulously documented with both photographs and archival documentation. Arsenal and Quartermaster records thought to have been destroyed were located and new serial numbers attributed to the Marine Corps have been identified for Krag rifles (1,000) as well as M1903 rifles, M1911 Colt Automatics, BAR's and even a handful of shotguns. Detailed information about quantities contracted are supplied in the field gear chapter in regards to cartridge belts and suspenders. The USMC Quartermaster Depot is examined and details about its manufacturing and capabilities are described.

Germany's Combat Helmets 1933-1945: A Modern Study

By Ken Niewiarowicz

Perhaps the best reference yet written on the overall subject of Third Reich steel helmets.

The book begins with an examination of the Model 1935 helmet and shows details of the earliest produced specimens by five separate manufacturers. Painted finishes and insignia are pictured and described in detail. Later modifications of shell, component and decal design are explained in further separate chapters on the M40, M42 and re-issue helmets.

The subject of the special steel headgear issued to German airborne units is dealt with in a separate chapter which includes some of the rarest known examples from collections world-wide.

A chapter on decals produces the most detailed examination yet seen in print. Insignia of different branches are shown as applied to various helmet models as well as un-applied form.

Lengthy appendixes are included which cover components such as chinstraps, liners, and acceptance stamps. Differences in design and manufacture are examined with innumerable close-up photos.

River Patrol Insignia

of the United States Navy (Vietnam) 1966/1972

by Scott Kraska & Stephen Kirby

Those who served in Task Force 116 are among the most elite teams deployed by the U.S. Navy in Vietnam: PBRs, SEALs, Seawolves, and Black Ponies. Their mission was to route the enemy deep within the secluded waterways of the Delta. This book illustrates the colorful insignia, emblems and artifacts used by these units in great detail. The unit patches produced by the River Patrol Forces used symbols of heraldry, strength, defiance, and sometimes humor which represents the best of men fighting to protect their "brothers in arms." The black berets and the distinctive unit patches emblazoned on their jungle jackets and worn into battle brought these men together as a team.
